OUR SPECIALTY

Gastroenterology (GI) is a medical subspecialty, which focuses on the diagnosis and treatment of digestive system disorders. Major organs of the digestive system include the esophagus, stomach, liver, gallbladder, pancreas, intestines and rectum. Common GI disorders include problems with swallowing, digestion, elimination and nutrition.

Gastroenterologists are the most qualified medical professionals to diagnose and treat diseases and disorders of the digestive system. They must first be trained in Internal Medicine, complete three years of specialized GI training, pass a National Board examination and continue to meet annual education requirements to maintain Board certification.

SCREENING FOR COLON CANCER SAVES LIVES

At DIGESTIVE CARE™, we believe that preventing colorectal cancer requires deliberate action. According to the American Cancer Society, the number of colorectal cancer cases and deaths can be significantly reduced by finding and treating abnormalities before cancers have a chance to fully form. Detected in its earliest stages, the survival rate for colorectal cancer is more than 90%. Whatever your age, whether you are male or female, it is important to know whether you have colorectal cancer risk factors. Talk with your doctor to develop a personal screening plan. Screening should start at age 50, or earlier if you have a family history or other high risk factors.

OUR ROLE

Your primary care doctor treats your routine health care needs and refers you to medical specialists for consultation when needed. A DIGESTIVE CARE™ gastroenterologist works as a consultant to your doctor and will provide the results of your tests or procedures directly to him or her. Your regular physician will then share the results with you. If additional testing or treatment is needed, your doctor will continue to coordinate your health care and will work with DIGESTIVE CARE™ to develop an effective treatment plan.

YOUR ROLE

At DIGESTIVE CARE™, we want you to be involved in your health care by asking questions, furnishing complete medical records and providing up-to-date insurance information.

If you are scheduled for an appointment in one of our care centers, please check with your doctor's office to make sure they have sent all pertinent medical information to our office prior to your visit. If you are scheduled for a diagnostic exam, follow all preparation instructions completely so that the procedure will be successful and will not need to be rescheduled or repeated.
